The opening souvenir of Divan Hotel.

The story of the hotel's name:

As the completion of the construction drew near, a competition was organized in order to find a name for the hotel.

The competition was Mr. Vehbi Koç's idea:

“Let's consult notable men of letters and artists and let them find a name” he said. A letter was sent to 28 selected individuals. Finally, “Divan”, the name proposed by Mr. Fikret Adil, an art critique and Mr. Ömer Sami Coşar, a journalist, was chosen.

As seen on the opening souvenir card, the letter “i” sound in the name was, for a long period of time, lengthened. When pronounced with a lengthened “i”, the name meant “glants”. This souvenir card bears the hotel's first logo.

January 16, 1956

The Divan's lights turned on!

Mr. Vehbi Koç had fulfilled the promise to the government to finish the hotel four months before the planned opening, in order to manage to host a thousand delegates who came to İstanbul for International Bank and Monetary Fund Congress in September 1955. Just a few days prior to its magnificent grand opening night. Divan Hotel also hosted a very special celebration. It was the wedding ceremony of Ms. Semahat Arsel, the elder daughter of Mr. Vehbi Koç, and Mr. Nusret Arsel. These two important events served as a rehearsal for the opening and management of the hotel. The opening night in January 16, was a spectacular as anticipated. The opening took Turkish art and artists to new heights and transformed the night into a feast of art and culture.
